THE NEWCOMES MEMOIRS OF A MOST RE SPECTABLE FAMILY. Edited by Arthur Pendennis, esq. By William Makepeace Thackeray With Illustrations by Richard Doyle, Biographical Edition, Volume VIII, octavo, pp. xi, 800 Harper & Brothers.

Mrs. Ritchie's introduction to "The Newcomes" gives her readers some pleasant glimpses of her father's childhood at the time when the lenely little boy was sent "home" from India, to and to go to school. Her own reminiscences and the letters she quotes certainly recall, as she declares, the early chapters of "The Newcomes" Her description of "Aunt Becher" justifies her in "I do believe her other name was Miss Martha Honeyman"; and this earliest known letter of the little Thackeray might have been work of young Clive Newcome himself.

My dear mama.-I hope you are quite well. I have given my dear grandmama a kiss; my Aunt Ritchie is very good to me. wick; there are so many good boys to play with. St. James's Park is a very fine place. St. Paul's Church, too, I like very much; it is a finer place than I expected. I hope Captain Smyth is well; give my love to aim and tell him he must bring ne to your affectionate son, William

His mother told me that once, when only three or four years old, and while sitting on her knee it the evening hour, she observed him gazing upward and lost in admiration. "Ecco," he exnimed, pointing to the evening star which was ining like a diamond over the crescent moon its struck her the more, as she had noticed its struck her the more, as see had noted as ame beautiful combination on the night of shirth. "Ecco" was probably "decco," which Hindostanee for "look." I have often heard at when he first came to London and was lying through the city he called out "That is ing through the city he called out "That is Paul's" He had recognized it from a ure. He was with his father's sister, Mrs. itchie, at the time, and she was alarmed by otleing that his uncle's hat, which he had put in play, quite fitted him. She took him to see Sir Charles Clarke, the great physician the day, who examined him, and said, "Don't he has a large head, but there is a great mind for a long time, and his daughter action. Perhaps Bulwer is better than both of us in this quality; his last book, written at fifty, is better and richer than any he has done. If I last so long, I dare say I shall be busy in parliamentary reports or historical later letter he says of a publisher's proposal that he should edit Horace Walpole's letters that it is just the sort of work he should like; such as would keep me at home pleasantly em volumes . . . of old biographies and histories. my old age." A large part of "The Newcomes" was dictated to his daughter Anne, the novelist walking up and down the room meanwhile; but point he would always send his secretary awaytion as the novel approached its end; but with in deep emotion. Many of the chapters of the novel were penned in Rome, where father and children spont a part of the winter of 1853-54.

This shall serve as an envelope to the girl's letter, which I see is full of captures and pleasure; and that is something worth travelling for. We want to St. Peter's yesterday, and agreed Pisa is the best, the other is a huge heathen parade, all the statues represent lies almost, parade, all the statues represent lies almost, and the Founder of the religion utterly disappears under the enormous pile of fiction and extensively that has been built around illum. I wasn't sorry when the Journey from Civita Vecchia was over. Having eighty or ninety louis in noy pocket, I should have been good ment for the brigands had they chosen to come. Everyboely I have met is more or less a thief or a beggar. Every miserable official at every post-house, customs what not, holds out his swindling hand and begs, and the earth swarms with myriads of priests and friars who neither toll nor spin, but live on the people, and perform fetish and interpret the will of the gods. Quam diu? I wonder when it will be over? And I wonder when my daughters are coming to break-have seen here that I care to see again. Ah! where are the loyful eyes and bright perceptions of youth? The girls have many kind friends—Mrs Sartoris, Mrs. Browning I wish I was not thinking of No. 8 the minute No. 7 is done. But so is the condition of man, I suppose, until the end comes and peace. If I have a blue devil, he is of such a faint blue that you can hardly see it, and when I look him steadily in the face he presently vanishes, and I feel that I am very fairly happy. Who can say more, or how many as much? I have made acquaintance with a convert, an Oxford man, whom I like and who interests me. And I am trying to pick my Oxford man's brains and see from his point of view. But it isn't mine, and old Popery and old paganism seem to me as dead, the one as the other.

I don't seem to care much more about "The Newcomes" than about other sublunary things.

Our Own Foundries and Shops

When he wrote this rather despondent letter the novelist was already sickening for an attack of Roman fever; but it must be admitted that well he was as modest about his own "What a fuss you make about my yellow books here in t. e country!" he said to a group of English girls who, while was in course of publication, had entreated him to let Clive and Ethel marry and be happy. "In town no one cares for them. They haven't the time. The characters once created lead me, and I follow where they direct. I want, too, to say in my way, that truth are the greatest of Heaven's commandments and blessings to us; that the best of us, the many especially who pride thomselves on their virtue most, are wretchedly weak, vein and selfish; and at least to preach such a charity, as a common-sense of our shame and unworthiness might inspire to us poor people.

There is but one suggestion to be made to Mrs. Ritchie in reference to her biographical chapters, and that is to the effect that she should read her "copy" and her proofs with greater care. We note occasional bits of heedlessnessas in the use of the words "flourishing style" twice in one sentence of her description of Thackeray's boyish drawings.
